JAPANESE PUT SEVEN RUSSIAN WARSHIPS OUT OF BUSINESS

Two Attacks at Port Arthur, Seat of the Russian Government in Far East, Results In Stunning Disaster to Russia.

Houston, Texas, February 10.—Today's Houston Post carries these headlines on Japanese-Russian war:

Japanese sink or capture seven Russian warships. Two attacks at Port Arthur, the seat of Russian Government in the Far East, resulted in stunning disaster to the Czar's forces. Russian fleet is helpless. Five sunken vessels bar entrance to Port Arthur harbor, and part of the Czar's fleet is bottled up inside and part is cut off from coal supply outside. Japanese occupy Chemulpo, Korea, capturing one Russian cruiser and sinking another. Russian mail steamer captured. Powers astounded. United States moved to safeguard China, also to restrict hostilities in Far East to the smallest area possible. Attitude of the Washington government creates sensation in diplomatic circles.

New York, February 10.—The Czar of Russia has formally declared war against Japan.

The Japanese put three of the Russian big warships out of commission, put holes in the battleships Poltava and Ezarvitch, and cruiser Bogama, blocking harbor with the disabled craft, cutting off other battleships from coal supplies. The Japanese ships escaped without the slightest injury.

Washington, February 10.—Secretary Hay addresses a note to powers to join the United States in notifying belligerents that neutralities of China must be respected, and that hostilities must be restricted so as to minimize hardships and horrors of war.

New York, February 10.—The Japanese so far have put out of business two Russian battleships and five cruisers—two battleships and three cruisers at Port Arthur, and two cruisers at Chennepa.

London, February 10.—Dispatches from Tokio correspondent of Central News state that three transports of the Russian fleet, conveying troops were captured off Asia Korea yesterday by the Japanese.
